Teaching

I have taught at St Andrews and Cambridge, and at the College of Wooster (Ohio), in a wide range of areas, from first-year undergraduate to M.Litt. level, including large lecture groups (150 students), small discussion seminars or individual dissertation supervision, and a range of class sizes in between.

First/second-year undergraduate: I have taught political philosophy, critical thinking, epistemology, history of modern philosophy, history/philosophy of science, and introductory formal logic; most commonly at this level I have taught introductory metaphysics and epistemology, covering topics such as personal identity, time, metaphysics of race, scepticism, justification, testimony.

Advanced undergraduate: I have taught courses in philosophy of science, philosophy of physics, metaphysics, philosophy of language, and epistemology. Most recently, I have taught Contemporary Epistemology, focusing on issues such as epistemic (in)justice, ignorance, deliberative democracy, conspiracy theories, and informational privacy.

M.Litt. (graduate): usually at this level I teach Texts in Contemporary Metaphysics, most recently focusing on topics in Social Metaphysics

I am happy to share syllabuses (or syllabi) and course materials with anyone who is interested; please contact me to enquire.
